Yaroslavl Global Policy Forum: Unlocking Moscow's diversity

Posted: 26 Sep 2011 02:24 PM PDT

In his address to the Yaroslavl Global Policy Forum earlier this month, President Medvedev emphasized that Russia's multinational and multiethnic makeup is a creative asset. My research into London's creative industries leads me to fully agree, and this goal to unlock the potential of Russia's diversity is a move that deserves a warm welcome.

Medvedev's vision of social modernization and civil society in Russia

Posted: 28 Sep 2011 02:12 PM PDT

Almost three years to the day when the collapse of Lehman Brothers triggered the global financial crash, the focus is shifting to the social crisis that is engulfing different parts of the world. Amid low economic growth and high unemployment, a protracted social recession is taking hold that undermines the societal cohesion on which democracies and market economies depend – both in developed countries and emerging markets like Russia.
